CONFESSION OF A MURDERER.

sterview With Stephen Abbott is Jaliantial Account of the West Haven

Homicide.

[From the New Haven Register, Jan. 7.]

One of our reporters this morning (7th) visited lephen Abbott, convicted of the murder of Appola M. Broason. He found Abbott quite collected of free to converse on the subject. He is not a andsome man, but seems to be tolerably intelligent, and told his story with an air of sincerity that clined the hearer to credit it. His marrative of the roumstances which led to the homicide and the ay it took place is given below, and will be found threating.

gent, and told his story with an art of sincery, maintimed the hearer to credit it. His narrative of the circumstances which led to the homicide and the way it took place is given below, and will be found interesting:

I was born at woodstock, in Muddy Brook parish, and if flive until Saturday I shall be fifty-two years old. I have been acquainted with Bronson some twelve years, and we have always been the best of friends. I worked for him a year ago this winter, cutting wood, and he used to go off to New Haven and leave me to take care of his meiner, sometimes for three months at a time, 1 ast spring, April or May, which we went down to build the house. Then I went home and got in the hay. Bronson did not come up till about the middle of July. During this visit, I think it was, we went to watervine and got on considerable of a spree, and Bronson told me about his trouble with the Welton family. The trouble was about a girl, daughter of Abljah Welton, he said he intended to marry. Bronson got jealous of the girl and used violence. Abljah Welton had Bronson taken up, and it cost him some $100 or $1400 to settle the affair. Believe there was some charge of slander. Merritt Bronson, a lawyer in New Britain, was employed by Welton to carry on the suit against his brother Apollos. At Waterville, after drinking pretty freely, Bronson told me how they had used him, and he was going to have revenge and he wanted me seem to this plan. Ablied Story of the girl may have the world free from Waterville, worked by Henry Welton, and the other on Mount Toby, three mides off. Bronson wanted me to take a jug of liquor, which he would Grug, and leave it near the first mill, so that Henry Welton would get it, and go with him and set fire to Abljah Welton's mill. He gave me a gun to bind the bargain and was to give nie fifty dollars in money when the job was finished. This was last August. I then went to work for his land, and he was leave it near the day of the beroe to the beauth of the bargain and was to give nie fifty dollars i

In the composition of the plot when went up.

Load min Ho expose the whole plot when went up.

Cangult up the axe, lying near the door, and came as me with it.

There was a plank set up for planing slats, and I dodged around that, and he struck at me with the axe.

When it came down, I caught it by the handle give for the masterning of the axe, and I got it from him. He then caught up a strip of board and struck me with it to not he left arm, mjuring it severely. I struck him with the axe dat ways—that is, I meant to do so. He fell on his knees, and grabbed me by the legs, and tupped me over back.

It is to the axe. As soon as I was liberated got up and hit him again. He dove for my feet again, but I kept out of reach this time, and struck him again, and be lay senseless. The last blow was on the back, or side of the head. In had odne, but it was getting inght, and my corrage thaled me, or the devit put I limb my head not to go. The thought struck me that perhaps Cook and his men wont do there are also or the correct of the lead in a correct, and picked up the lose boards and things scattered about. Barned the where ironeous may dim a correct, and picked up the lose boards and things scattered about. Barned the where ironeous may and denied most positively that where ironeous may and denied to have formed the board and things scattered about. Barned the bloody shawings in the stove. Alter putting the barn to rights, went down to make the proposed to be a seen and things scattered about. Barned the bloody some of the witnesses, but how it was actually done he could not left. It was sometime in the left.

About three colock i took up the floor, and took the money and gave him a shove from me towards the light house and stood and saw him float off four or five rods in a south and east direction. Then came back to the barn, emptied the feathers from the bed tick in the house and put the tick and bed clothing on the same place where Fronson had burned the straw tick and burned them, putting on shavings, &c., to help it on. He then described how he tried to destroy the traces of blood in the barn. He was intending to go home that day, and thought he would try to get a few claims to take along, and used Cook's boat. Related the conversation with Mr. Cook and Mrs. Alling when they came for the boat, substantially as testified. He then told how he took Bronson's watch, which was hanging up in the barn, and gave it to Mrs. Roger Alling. After that came into the city to go home, but missed the train. He slept that hight in Mr. Himman's hayloft, and came back to the city in the morning; awapped Bronson's coat, and went off on the five o'clock train. He worked at home until arrested, a week later, by four Flymouth constables. The foregoing is the substance of Abbot's statement. In some parts we have been oblited to omit immaterial matter, but most of it is in his own language.

A CATROLIC PRIEST KHLED.—A sad accident occurred on the Michigan Central a few nights since, near Michigan City, with a fatal result. Father Kerrigan, a Catholic priest of Lafayette, had been to Chicago to attend the funeral of a prominent ecclestatic, and was returning home on the evening in question. He should have got of the train at Michigan City, but fell saleep, and did not awake until the train was just checking up at New Rochester station. More asleep than awake then, he started up, and hastily walking out on the platform stepped off white the train was still in motion. The corner of one car struck him in the side, breaking three ribs, and he was otherwise severely injured. He lingered, however, in great pain until the 5th inst, when he expired. Father Kerrigan was a man of much ability and experience, a classical and theological scholar, and greatly beloved. He was educated at Maynorth College, Ireland.
